It includes two theme parks, many resort hotels, Disney Nature Resorts, a shopping, dining and entertainment complex, and a golf course, in addition to several additional recreational and entertainment facilities. Disneyland Park is the original theme park of the complex, opening with the resort on April 12, 1992. The second theme park, Walt Disney Studios Park, opened in 2002, 10 years after the original park. Disneyland Paris celebrated its 25th anniversary in 2017. In the 25 years since opening, 320 million people have visited Disneyland Paris, making it the most visited theme park in Europe. The Paris resort is the second Disney park to open outside the United States after the opening of Tokyo Disney Resort in 1983, and is The Largest Disney Resort, open outside the United States. Disneyland Paris is also the only Disney resort outside the United States wholly owned by The Walt Disney Company. Walt Disney Company has announced a rescue plan of 1 billion pounds ($1.25 billion) to save its subsidiary Disneyland Paris, the Financial Times reported October 6, 2014. The park is saddled with its debt, which is estimated at about 1.75 billion euros ($2.20 billion) and about 15 times its gross median profit. Until June 2017, Disney held a minority stake in the resort only when they bought the remaining shares. In 2017, The Walt Disney Company offered an unofficial takeover of Euro Disney S.C.A., buying 9% of the company from Kingdom Holding and an open offer of 2 euros per share for the remaining shares. Thus, the total ownership of The Walt Disney Company was 85.7%. Walt Disney Company will also invest an additional 1.5 billion euros in strengthening the company. History Of Finding a Place for a European Resort After the Success of Disneyland in California, plans to build a similar theme park in Europe have emerged in sites in Frankfurt, Paris, London or Milan are under consideration. Led by E. Cardon Cardon Tokyo Disneyland opened in 1983 in Japan with instant success, forming a catalyst for international expansion. In late 1984, Disney theme parks executives Dick Nunes and Jim Cora presented a list of about 1,200 possible European locations for the park. The United Kingdom, France, Italy and Spain were considered. However, the UK and Italy were excluded from the list due to the lack of suitable expanses of flat land. By March 1985, the number of possible locations had been reduced to four; two in France and two in Spain. Both countries saw the potential economic benefits of the Disney theme park and offered competing deals to fund Disney. Both Spanish sites were located near the Mediterranean And suggested a subtropical climate similar to Disney parks in California and Florida. Disney asked each site to provide an average temperature for each month during the previous 40 years, which proved to be a complex effort as none of the records were computerized and were recorded on paper. The site in Pego, Alicante became a leader, but the location was controversial because it would mean the destruction of the Marjal de Pego-Olive swamps, a site of natural beauty and one of the last houses of the almost extinct Samaruc or Valencia Toothcarp, so there were several local protests among environmentalists. Disney has also shown interest in a site near Toulon in southern France, near Marseille. The pleasant landscape of this region, as well as its climate, has made the location a major competitor for what will be called Euro Disneyland. However, a shallow foundation was found under the site, which would have made the construction too difficult. Finally, the place in the rural town of Marne la Vallée was chosen because of its proximity to Paris and its central location in Western Europe. This place is estimated to be no more than four hours away for 68 million people and no more than two hours of flight for another 300 million. Michael Eisner, CEO of Disney at the time, signed the first letter of agreement with the French government on the 20 square kilometers (4,940 acre) site on December 18, 1985, and the first financial contracts were drawn up over the next spring. The final contract was signed by Walt Disney Company executives and the French government and territorial teams on March 24, 1987. Construction began in August 1988, and in December 1990 an information centre called Espace Euro Disney was opened to show the public what was being built. Plans for a theme park next to the Euro Disneyland-based entertainment industry, Disney-MGM Studios Europe, quickly went into development, which is scheduled to open in 1996 with a construction budget of $2.3 billion. The construction manager was Bovis. Designing and building the Disneyland Hotel. The entrance hall to the park passes through the hotel. In order to provide housing for patrons, that 5200 Disney-owned Rooms will be built in the complex. In March 1988, Disney and the Council of Architects (Frank Gehry, Michael Graves, Robert A.M. Stern, Stanley Tigerman and Robert Venturi) decided on an exclusively American theme in which each hotel would depict the region of the United States. At the time of its opening in April 1992, seven hotels had been built, with a total of 5,800 rooms built. The Walt Disney World's Downtown Disney entertainment, shopping and dining complex was designed by Frank Gehry. With its towers of oxidized silver and bronze stainless steel under a canopy of lights, it opened as a Disney Festival. For an estimated daily attendance of 55,000 people, Euro Disney planned to serve about 14,000 people per hour at Euro Disneyland Park. To do this, 29 restaurants were built in the park (another 11 restaurants were built in Euro Disney resort hotels and five at Festival Disney). The menu and prices were varied with the prevailing American flavor and Disney's precedent for serving alcoholic beverages was continued in the park. 2,300 seats in the patio (30% of the park seats) have been installed to suit the expected preference of Europeans to eat outdoors in good weather. In the test kitchens of Walt Disney World recipes have been adapted to European tastes. Walter Meyer, chef of menu development at Euro Disney and head of food development at Walt Disney World, said: There are a few things we needed to change, but most of the time people would tell us, Do your thing. Do what the American. Recruitment/employment unlike Disney's American theme parks, Euro Disney was focused on permanent employees (an estimated requirement of 12,000 for the theme park itself), as opposed to seasonal and temporary part-time workers. Casting centers were established in Paris, London and Amsterdam. However, the French government and Disney realized that concentrated efforts will be made to tap into the local French labour market. Disney was looking for workers with sufficient communication skills who spoke two European languages (French and one another) and were socially sociable. After precedent, Euro Disney created its own Disney University to train workers. By November 1991, 24,000 people had applied. The controversy over the prospect of a Disney park in France has been the subject of controversy and controversy. Critics, including prominent French intellectuals, denounced what they saw as the cultural imperialism of Euro Disney and believed it would contribute to the unhealthy American consumption in France. On 28 June 1992, a group of French farmers blocked Euro Disney in protest of the then-United States-backed farm policy. One journalist for the centre-right French newspaper Le Figaro wrote: I want the rebels to set fire to Disneyland with all my heart. Mnuchkin, the Parisian director, called the concept cultural Chernobyl, Chernobyl, which will be reflected in the media in the early years of Euro Disney. In response, the French philosopher Michel Serres said: It is not America that invades us. It is we who adore him, re-adopt his fashion and, above all, his words. The then chairman of Euro Disney S.C.A. Robert Fitzpatrick replied: We didn't come and say okay, we're going to wear berets and baguettes on Mickey Mouse. We are who we are. Topics of controversy also included Disney's American managers requiring english at all meetings, and a Disney appearance code for employees that listed rules and restrictions for the use of makeup, facial hair, tattoos, jewelry and more. French trade unions held protests against the code of appearance, which they regarded as an attack on individual freedom. Others criticized Disney as insensitive to French culture, individualism and privacy because restrictions on individual or collective freedoms were illegal under French law if it could not be pre-demonstrated that restrictions were necessary for work and did not exceed what was needed. Disney countered, saying that a ruling that barred them from introducing such a standard of employment could jeopardize the park's image and long-term success. For us, the appearance of the code has a big effect in terms of product identification, said Thor Degelmann, Euro Disney's hr director. Without it we couldn't imagine the Disney product that people would expect. The opening day and early years of Euro Disney opened for preview and testing of employees in March 1992. At that time, the visitors were mostly park staff and their families, who checked the facilities and operations. The press was able to visit it the day before the opening of the park on April 12, 1992. On April 12, 1992, the Euro Disney Resort and its theme park, Euro Disneyland, officially opened (on the same date that La Cinq Médiaset channel closed permanently). Visitors were warned of chaos on the roads. A government survey showed that half a million people carrying 90,000 cars could try to enter the complex. French radio warned the movement to avoid the area. By noon, parking was about half full, indicating an attendance level below 25,000. Explanations for the lower-than-expected turnout included speculation that people had opted to stay away and that the one-day strike, which interrupted RER's direct rail link with Euro Disney from central Paris, made the park inaccessible. Due to the European recession in August this year, the park faced financial difficulties, as there was nothing that could be done, and an oversupply of hotels, which led to insufficient performance. In 1993, Euro Disney launched a new ride on the Indiana Jones roller coaster. A few weeks after the opening of the attraction problems with emergency brakes, which led to injuries to guests. In 1994, the company was still experiencing financial difficulties. There were rumors that the euro was close to filing for bankruptcy. Banks and advocates held meetings to work out some of the financial challenges facing Euro Disney. In March 1994, the Disney team began negotiations with the banks so they could get some help for their debts. As a last resort, Walt Disney's company threatened to close Disneyland Park in Paris, leaving banks with land. Financial, attendance and employment struggling Disney at the Newport Bay Club in May 1992, entertainment magazine The Hollywood Reporter reported that about 25% of Euro Disney's employees - about 3,000 people - quit their jobs because of unacceptable working conditions. He also said that the park's attendance lags far behind expectations. The disappointing attendance can be at least partly explained by the economic downturn and the increased unemployment that has now affected France and much of the rest of the developed world; when the construction of the resort began, the economy was still on the rise. Euro Disney S.C.A. responded in an interview with The Wall Street Journal in which Robert Fitzpatrick said that only 1,000 people had left their jobs. In response to the financial situation, Fitzpatrick ordered the Disney-MGM Studios Europe project to be suspended pending an additional decision. Prices at hotels have been reduced. Despite these efforts in May 1992, the park had an attendance of about 25,000 (according to some reports, there were 30,000) instead of the projected 60,000. Euro Disney's share price fell sharply, and on July 23, 1992, Euro Disney announced an expected net loss of approximately 300 million French francs in its first year of operation. During the first winter of Euro Disney hotel occupancy was so low that it was decided to close the Newport Bay Club hotel during the season. Initial expectations were that every visitor would spend about US$33 a day, but towards the end of 1992, analysts found costs were about 12% lower. Efforts to improve attendance included the supply of alcoholic beverages with food at Euro Disneyland Park, in response to the expected European demand, which began on June 12, 1993. By the summer of 1994, Euro Disney was saddled with $3 billion in debt. Disney CFO Richard Nanula and Wall Street financier Steve Norris worked with Alwaleed business consultant Mustafa Al-Hejailan to save the company. In that deal, the 49 percent stake in Walt Disney Corp. was reduced to 39 percent, the banks agreed to forgo interest payments until 1997, Disney sent royalties and fees until 1999, and Alvalid agreed to pay $345 million for a 24 percent stake in Euro Disney. On October 1, 1994, Euro Disney changed its name to Disneyland Paris. On May 31, 1995, a new attraction opened in the theme park. Space mountain: De la Terre a la Luna has been planned since the creation of Disneyland Paris under the title Mountain, but was reserved for of public interest. With the redesign of the attraction (which premiered as Space Mountain at Walt Disney World Resort in 1975), including a gun launch system, inversions and a soundtrack on the ride, the $100 million attraction was dedicated to the ceremony, which was attended by celebrities such as Elton John, Claudia Schiffer and Buzz Aldrin. On July 25, 1995, Disneyland reported its first quarterly profit of $35.3 million. Results for the fiscal year ended 30 September 1995 were published on 15 November 1995; during the year, the attendance of the theme park increased from 8.8 million to 10.7 million people, which is 21% more. Hotel occupancy also increased from 60 to 68.5%. After paying off the debt, Disneyland of Paris ended the year with a net profit of $22.8 million. As of March 2002, Disneyland Paris changed its name to Disneyland Resort Paris. In 2002, Euro Disney S.C.A. and Walt Disney Company announced another annual profit at Disneyland Paris. However, it suffered a net loss over the next three years. By March 2004, Walt Disney Company had agreed to write off all debt that Euro Disney S.C.A. owed to Walt Disney Company. On December 1, 2003, Euro Disney S.C.A launched the Need Magic campaign, which lasted until March 2006, to attract new, first-time European visitors to the resort. And by 2005, having been open for less than fifteen years, Disneyland Paris became the number one tourist destination in Europe, embracing the Louvre and the Eiffel Tower. In March 2006, Disneyland Resort Paris launched a Believe your dreams ad campaign and paired it with TGV East European Line to encourage a Visit to the Resort by a European family. Shortly after announcing a 12% increase in revenue for fiscal year 2007, Euro Disney S.C.A. split-consolidation of 100 to 1 shares. August 2006 brought the resort 200 million visitors, and made the third consecutive year of revenue growth for the resort, as well as a record record 15.3 million visitors in attendance. In 2009, the resort demonstrated a commitment to recruiting new jobs, especially during the Christmas and summer seasons, which continued in 2010 and 2011, when 2,000 and 3,000 employment contracts were concluded, respectively. In fiscal 2009, revenue decreased by 7% and net loss was 63 million euros.C. A study by the Interagency Delegation examining The contribution of Disneyland Paris to the French economy was published on the 20th anniversary of the resort in March 2012. It was found that despite the resort's financial difficulties, it generated 37 billion euros in tourism-related revenues of more than twenty supports an average of 55,000 jobs in France per year, and that one job at Disneyland Paris creates almost three jobs elsewhere in France. For the first time in the resort's history, Disneyland Park and Walt Disney Studios were closed from November 14 to 17, 2015 as part of national days of mourning across France following the Paris attacks in November 2015. On June 19, 2017, the operating company of the Euro Disney S.C.A. resort was acquired by The Walt Disney Company, giving them full control of the resort. In December 2018, Natasha Rafalski took over as CEO. On September 1, 2017, the resort's second natural resort opened as Les Villages Nature Paris. On February 27, 2018, Walt Disney Company CEO Bob Iger announced that the company will invest 2 billion euros in the Disneyland resort in Paris. Walt Disney Studios Park will be expanded by three new areas based on Marvel, Frozen and Star Wars. In addition to the three new areas, the expansion includes a new lake that will be a focal point for entertainment experiences as well as connect each of the new park areas. The first phase of the expansion will be completed in 2021. In April 2019, this place hosted an esports tournament on dota 2. In March 2018, a regional division of Disney Parks West was formed with Disneyland in California, Walt Disney World in Florida and Disneyland Paris under the leadership of Catherine Powell, the outgoing president of Disneyland Paris. This reflects Disney Parks Eastern's Eastern Regional division consisting of Shanghai Disney Resort, Hong Kong Disneyland and Walt Disney Attractions Japan and led by Michael Colglazier. Natasha Rafalski was promoted from CFO to president of Disneyland Paris in December 2018. In September 2019, Powell resigned as president of the park's western division, and Disneyland in Paris moved to Disney Parks International, The East Region, returning to its previous name. On June 1, 2019, Disneyland Paris sponsored the Magic Pride Party, an LGBT holiday. Previous similar events have been held in the park since 2014, but have not been officially sponsored by Disney. On March 15, 2020, according to other Disney parks, the park was closed due to the global COVID-19 pandemic. The park reopened from July 15 to October 29, 2020, when it closed again due to a second nationwide blockade. The name is changed by Disneyland Paris, and its properties have been subject to a number of name changes, initially attempting to overcome the negative advertising that followed the launch of Euro Disney Resort. They can be reached from Disneyland bus station. Behind the scenes of Disneyland in Paris, there are strict rules designed to prevent guests from seeing the backstage areas of the park. Photography and photography are strictly prohibited in all backstage areas. The edges of parks are lined with ride buildings and foliage to hide areas that are not for the public to see. Numerous game areas allow entrance to the park for actors, parade floats, etc. When the gates of the area around the park are open, everything that can be seen through them is considered on stage and part of Disney Magic. So, from the moment the gates are opened, all cast must be in character on the spot to perform. Because the complex is so large, shuttle buses take actors to different parts of the parks on the service roads located on the perimeter of the parks. Many of the attractions are located in large, sound buildings called show buildings, some of which are partially or completely camouflaged by the external theme. Most show buildings have non-white flat roofs that support HVAC units and walkways to serve actors. Placed inside the show building are actual attractions, which include hidden walkways, service areas, control rooms, and other behind-the-scenes activities.
